11 LETTERMEN END CAREERS IN BIG GAME

BERKELEY, Nov. 18.—Eleven California varsity football players, six of them regulars and nine of them letter men of last year, will play their last California game in the "Big Game" next Saturday at Palo Alto, a check of the Golden Bear roster showed today.

Seven of the nine letter winners started together with the undefeated freshmen team of 1932 and have played four years of football in all. They are Bob Britton, left end; Larry Lutz, left tackle; Dave Anderson, left guard; Conrad Tenney, right guard; Bob Carlton, right tackle; Jack Brittingham, right end; and Al "Barney" Thord, quarterback. Of these seven, Britton, Brittingham, Lutz, Anderson and Tenney are expected to play. The elder of the Brittingham brothers is recovering from a knee injury in the Washington game and may not be ready for the big test.

The other two lettermen are Frank "Mack" Mack and "Chase" Cannon, quarterback, the other two varsity veterans are Don Fowler, left halfback who has started every major game of this season, and Richie Hay, second string, left end. Fowler, a transfer from Santa Monica junior college, played on the varsity last year but was injured just as the conference schedule began, and did not have sufficient playing time to win a varsity letter.

The group includes at least three players who are regarded as candidates for either national or coast honor—the two Brittings, rated among the best ends in this football season, and Lutz, a tackle of All-American calibre.

San Francisco To Ask Bridge Road Be Built

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18. (AP.)—The San Francisco city administration today decided to demand construction of a long bridge across the Golden Gate strait to be paid for out of State funds, with work to begin immediately.

The decision was reached at a conference called by Mayor Angelo Rossi to consider the proposal of the State Director of Public Works, Earl Lee Kelly, that part of the additional expense be met by the bridge district.

Testimony revealed that Schlesinger had been driving with one hand and had been kissing his girl companion "just a split second" before the crash. Mrs. Miller was a passenger in the automobile and was riding in the back seat.

The driver's "mental processes" were "fuzzed" due to his love-making, which probably was the fact, he was held to the same responsibility as one who becomes voluntarily intoxicated," the court said.

THE CHEST

Within the chest area we include that portion of the body which is enclosed behind the ribs and breast-bone, and which extends between the neck and the abdomen.

The chest contains two of the vital organs: the heart and the lungs. The lungs are the lowest part of the respiratory system, or the breathing system, which system also includes the bronchial tubes, the wind-pipe and the throat and nose. Each lung is enclosed within a membrane called a pleura, and the pleural cavity is moistened with a serous secretion. The two pleurae encasing the two lungs are cut off from each other. The pleura is designed to fit the special circumstances under which the lungs must work and it is due to this arrangement that the lung has room in which to move while breathing. The lung cavity is separated from the abdomen by the diaphragm, the large, flat muscle used in breathing.

There are several disorders of the chest which are important, such as bronchitis, tuberculosis, pneumonia and pleurisy. Two of the symptoms commonly associated with a chest involvement are cough and pain in the chest. Bronchitis may occur in either an acute or chronic form and refers to an inflammation of the bronchial tubes. The characteristic symptom of bronchitis is a cough which may be accompanied by a sense of irritation just underneath the breast-bone.

Probably the disease of the chest most feared by the average person is tuberculosis of the lung or pulmonary tuberculosis. Tuberculosis develops insidiously and often the patient does not realize that the symptoms are due to a tubercular infection. The early symptoms are weakness, a slight cough, and perhaps a sensation of heaviness through the chest. This disease is due to the activity of the tubercle in the lung tissue; however, although the germs of tuberculosis are found in the lungs of many healthy persons, in the majority of cases, the resistance is high enough so that the germs do not become active. It is only when the resistance is lowered through those poor habits of living which induce enervation, that tuberculosis begins. Improper food, dissipation through late hours, lack of fresh air, lack of exercise, sluggish intestinal elimination—all of these are habits which may pave the way for tuberculosis to develop, providing the patient has a tendency to weakness of the lungs. Certainly, there exists the tubercular diathesis, just as there exists the rheumatic diathesis.

Pneumonia is one of the most important respiratory diseases. Lobar pneumonia gets its name from the fact that it usually starts in one lobe of the lung. Broncho-pneumonia frequently results as a downward extension of the inflammation seen in bronchitis. Lobar pneumonia often subsides through crisis; a sudden change occurs which makes the patient realize that the worst of the danger is over. With the development of the diathermy, we have an effective way of treating pneumonia.

Pleurisy refers to an inflammation of a pleura, and is accompanied by an exudation of fluid into the pleural cavity. The patient complains of a sharp, stabbing pain which is increased with each breath. The danger of pleurisy is the formation of adhesions, which will cause the two surfaces of the pleura to adhere.

The fortunate fact about diseases of the chest is that they are preventable. With a proper regard for good habits of living it becomes possible to escape them. Fresh air, out-of-door exercise, correct food, a good posture and breathing properly will do much to build a sound, healthy chest.

Articles are available for distribution on all of the diseases which I have discussed in today's lesson. I will be glad to send any of these articles to those desiring a copy. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
(Steam'ing the Face)
Question: Miss B. E. writes: "What is the reason for following a steaming of the face with the application of cold?"
Answer: Steaming the face will produce a relaxation and is followed by the application of cold water, or of ice, the cold serving to bring about contraction.
(Good Disinfectant)
Question: Mrs. L. B. inquires: "What is a good disinfectant to use around the home?"
Answer: Probably the best home disinfectant is plenty of hot water and soap. Warm water is preferable to cold because it more readily dissolves grease and dirt. Remember, soap is germicidal—that is, it kills germs.
(Insulin)
Question: M. V. asks: "Where is insulin produced in the body?"
Answer: Insulin is normally produced by certain cells in the pancreas, which cells are called the Islands of Langerhans. These islands produce an internal secretion, insulin, which is used to metabolize carbohydrates. An interference with this secretion causes diabetes.
(Tongue-tied)
Question: S. S. J. wants to know: "What makes a person tongue-tied?"
Answer: This is the result of an abnormal shortness of the frenum of the tongue which limits the movement of the organ. The frenum is a membrane which binds the tongue to the floor of the mouth. Clipping of the membrane which is easily done due to the thinness of the structure, will overcome the condition of being tongue-tied. The operation is a very slight one and the results are completely satisfactory.

Patience Is Chief Aid in Curing the Child Who Stutters

By CLAUD NORTH CHRISMAN, M.D.

A GREAT DEAL has been said about the evils of thumb sucking. If the thumb is pressed against the palate it may cause malformation of the bones, the teeth to protrude, and it may also flatten the end of the thumb. These things do happen in a small percentage of cases, but if the child is supplied with a sufficient amount of orange juice and cod liver oil, these developments will become uncommon.

DR. CHRISMAN

It is more important that nothing can be done to interfere with the development of speech. Our general observation is that the child who sucks his thumb is usually a child who is not getting enough attention. If let alone and no attention is paid to the habit, it will continue.

The child is much like grown folks; he wants to do what he is told not to do. I have gone into the phase of stuttering at considerable length, because in this, as in any other condition, prevention is much more satisfactory, and certainly easier, than cure.

If I can induce only an occasional mother to not interfere with her child's natural tendencies, and thus prevent chronic stuttering, I shall be satisfied.

Another phase of stuttering which is very prevalent, but probably more rapidly overcome, is that found in a normal child who tries to mimic a stutterer. You have all seen the child who associates with one who stutters soon begin to stutter as badly as the other. The only prevention here is to remove him from such surroundings.

A Bad Break

The stuttering child surely leads a dog's life when he enters school. Children are quick to notice peculiarities in others and to imitate, ridicule and tease. The result is that the defective child becomes self-conscious, feels that he is handicapped. He either brags it out and becomes pugnacious or grows disagreeable. He retreats to himself and avoids company with resultant loss of mental development and social contact.

The sooner he realizes he has a speech defect and can overcome it, the better off he will be. The child who stutters and stammers is nervous in his speech, and this must be overcome if he is to be benefited. Effort to make him hold his mouth, tongue and lips in the proper position to form words is wasted.

The child reproduces sound as he hears it. One in Maine and New Hampshire hears those around him use the New England twang and he produces the sounds the same way. So, also, the child of the south and the west, and we can always recognize the Scotchman and the Englishman.

The speech organs are not different. It is the sounds that are peculiar. So the first step to be taken with the stutterer is to determine that his hearing is normal. Then by sounding a word, he will develop his speech muscles by repetition and practice.

The parents and teachers must show a vast amount of patience. Give the child time to say his words. Don't take the words out of his mouth and say them for him. Let the stutterer stutter, and the lipper lip.

Patience Is Necessary

Discuss his defects frankly with him. He knows what he wants to say, and if given time and thought, will say them. He tries to talk fast in hopes the words will come out. This must be overcome and slowness of speech developed.

The parent or teacher of these children should watch and observe the method the child takes to continue his sentences. One will make certain movements with his hands, arms, or head, or speak certain extraneous words that seem to release his nervous reflexes and allow him to proceed with his sentence.

I have one stammerer who has always used the word "darn" to correct his spasms. In the midst of a flock of S's, he will suddenly say "darn", and his words flow on till the next stop, only to repeat the process.

Another will throw out his left arm, which seems to break the spell. Many schools train teachers in caring for these children and their services should be employed whenever possible. Parents, by slowly reading to the child, and having him pronounce with them, or letting him repeat sentences after them will aid materially.

In most cases retarded speaking will cure all stuttering, so long as it is retarded. Slow, patient effort in pronouncing their difficult words will overcome the trouble.

One of the first important steps is to show them that word sounds should be made when moving air out of the lungs and not as air is breathed in.

King George of Greece Takes Job

By TALBOT LAKE

WHAT does it feel like to be a king? Taking it from King George II of Greece, it isn't much fun. In 1923, when he finished fifteen months as king, George said: "I loathed, detested and abhorred every minute of it." He lived in semi-obscure seclusion in London until recalled to the throne last month. What he thinks now is a moot question.

Even at that, it may turn out to be better than living as a bachelor in none too sumptuous quarters, which has been George's fate during the time of his unseemly and his present reign. Although the Greek throne may not be the most stable kind of a job, it is the only instance in Europe where a monarchy has made a comeback.

He has lived in a small apartment three flights up for the past ten years, but during the last few months, as the Greek monarchists were getting busy, he has branched out into something of the splendor associated with a king. He is somewhat of the salesman type anyway, with a penchant for snappy dressing and facile talk.

There is a strong friendship between him and the British royal house, one reason being that he is a cousin of Princess Marina, the Duchess of Kent—although the liaison has existed for some years. This brings up a rather unusual situation. The plebeian which went over so overwhelmingly in favor of George was promoted chiefly by General Kondylis, who has had the inside track on political matters in Greece. When you consider that he leans decidedly toward the Italian cause it is easy to realize George will need all the diplomatic help he can get to appease everybody in the Hellenes. Kondylis, for his part, showed his wisdom by knowing when the people wanted a monarchy.

It is likely that the Greek military crowd will stay in power, with George playing it safe and keeping out of trouble at all times. His grandfather, George I, ruled fifty years before he was assassinated and his father, Constantine, was in trouble most of the time. Still, being a king is considered a good job.

Guide to Charm

Exercise Is Chief Aid to Double Chin

By JACQUELINE HUNT

OF ALL the things that can detract from your good looks—age, a blemished skin, or a large, unshapely nose—a double chin is most to be feared. This is a most annoying beauty problem—partly because double chins are so common, partly because they indicate carelessness on your part, and are so hard to get rid of.

Many double chins appear where there is unwanted fat. So be honest, if that is the reason back of yours, get your doctor's approval and plan a routine of diet and exercise that will take away the unneeded pounds.

Whatever the cause of your double chin, you will need special exercises for it and will have to pay more attention to posture. Exercises increase the circulation in the region, and this hastens results by toning the muscles and carrying away the waste of the broken-down fatty tissues.

The following exercises will make your neck more shapely, and the results will be the more pleasing. Place your tongue against the roof of your mouth and push upward as hard as you can. You will immediately feel your neck muscles tighten. Relax and repeat several times.

Then try this: Raise your chin up in the air, stretching the baggy tissues taut, and throwing the head back. Now lower the chin until it rests on your chest. Roll and push the head to the left shoulder, straighten and lean to the other way.

Let your head hang limply forward from your shoulders and from this position start rolling it about your shoulders, to the left, back, to the right and forward. Continue rolling the head around until you feel dizzy.

Astringent packs will help discourage double chins and reduce fleshy pads across the shoulders or at the back of your neck. Use the astringent pack immediately after your neck exercises while you are warm and a little tired, and the results will be more noticeable. Dissolve a large tablespoon of Epsom salts in one cup hot water. Soak a cotton pad in this and tie it across the double chin with a strip of gauze. Relax for twenty minutes.

Remove the pack and massage the neck and double chin with a piece of cotton wrapped in a piece of gauze. Massage the chin with little upward movements to tone the muscles and make the tissues firmer. Many beauty shops offer special astringent creams and tonics for keeping the neck and chin lines youthful and firm. You will like to try them if your double chin seems slow in responding.

Practice holding your head up and your chin just a little bit in if you want to encourage a pretty neckline and a good figure. For additional tips, send for my leaflet "Unfriendly Chins."

Beauty Tips

QUESTION: "I was much interested in your articles last year suggesting beauty aids for Christmas gifts. Most cosmetics seem terribly expensive to me, as I will have little to spend. However, I wish you would suggest something for my mother and friends."

—Schoolgirl.

Why not buy some nice things for your mother's bath? You can get pretty containers of bath salts, eau de cologne and dusting powder in matched scents that are decorative and practical.

Another suggestion is that you take some other member of the family into your confidence and make a dressing table for your mother. You could buy either an unpainted dressing table or find a small second-hand table with two drawers and refinish it in her favorite color. Add a ruffled skirt and a three-way mirror that can be set on top and you will have a lovely gift.

For your friends you can make tiny individual powder puffs from a big roll of cotton and pastel shades of baby ribbon, and tie them in cellophane bags or tuck them into hand-painted covered jars that can be used for powder. Among the things you can buy for less than a dollar are lipsticks with matching shades of nail polish, mascara in neat and decorative boxes scarcely larger than a lipstick, colorful nail and complexion brushes, neat little pack of bobby pins to be slipped into the pocketbook, boxes with tiny guest-size cakes of toilet soap, vanities, and gay packages of cleansing tissues.

Black Velvet Appropriated Small Pastries Pleasing To Palate and Art Sense

By IRENE VAIL

New York—No 'type of dress that adds to one's weight of years is ever a success, still fashion seems to make less of a fetish of youth than usual and dares details that have heretofore been associated with dowagers. Black velvet has been enthusiastically appropriated by the younger crowd, who also seem in a mind to make passerelles and all manner of such things like leather and braid trimmings.

Judging from the glad raiment women are flaunting, the effects of the depression are over. Theater audiences, the races, football games—everywhere smart women congregate—there is evidence of luxury and of beauty too. Now that the first shock of the changing fashions is over, I think you will agree the new clothes are beautiful. Certainly they are sumptuous.

Among the luxury fashions are the full length fur capes, made, hand-over-hand, of silver fox. There are shorter capes also made from these aristocratic animals, but the full length evening capes have been breathless.

Speaking of fur, swaggar coats are the last word, whether one is thinking in terms of ermine or the humble lapin. The swaggar coat is liked in suits too, since it provides not only the suit-coat, but a separate one as well. Swaggar types are seen for evening also; sometimes in fur, but often in brocades and velvet. That bright red is the season's top note in top hat fashions is something to think about, but don't think about it too seriously if one evening coat is your budget allowance for years to come.

The street length formal frock seems to have scored heavily. It solves the problem of the woman who wants to hide her slenderness under a regulation winter coat and just can't abide the idea of long skirts under such circumstances. The new cocktail, or bar, dresses—tea to you, maybe—are very elaborate as to fabric or detail, but sensibly plain as to the new clothes are made with a tiny veiled hat and the proper gloves and purse.

Modes and Manners

QUESTION: "Why is it wrong to say 'Pleased to meet you' when introduced to some one?"

ANSWER: In the first place, it is not even a complete sentence. Secondly, it is bound to have an unnatural sound unless one really is pleased. For general use, "How do you do," is accepted as being in better taste. While this phrase is itself rather meaningless, as at the time of introduction it is not likely that one either cares or wants to know how the other person does, it may, with proper intonation be made to sound both sincere and cordial.

MODERN WOMEN

The Daughter Who Was Spanked and the Sister Who Resented It

By MARIAN MAYS MARTIN

AN ASTONISHING number of fathers seem to go in for spanking adult daughters. Their provocation is no doubt great, but it does seem that the girls' reasoning powers might be first appealed to. Possibly this has happened, without result, so these irate fathers have felt impelled to resort to a method which is bound to humiliate a girl, if it has no other effect upon her.

You and Your Child

Child Resents Steady Interruptions

By JANE HERBERT GOWARD

ALLEN's mother is finding fault with him of late. It is not that the boy is disobedient. Quite the contrary, he always does errands for her and other favors when requested.

But of late, his disposition seems to be undergoing a change. He no longer does for his mother willingly. He sulks or grumbles. In fact he is turning into a regular troupe, she claims.

As a little boy, it used to flatter Allen to be called upon to help. He regarded it as a privilege rather than a chore. Mother's smile or nod or pat of approval was all the reward he needed to fill him with pride. Being so young and dependent, it was most important for him to succeed with mother. He devoted himself more or less, therefore, to currying favor with mother.

But now Allen is nearly five. For some time he has been growing more important to himself as a person. His own ideas and his own interests are absorbing more of his attention. He still obeys when mother calls him away from play, from sheer force of habit. But it is just a matter of time before he will refuse liability. There may be an intermediary stage when he will argue with his mother and try to get out of helping her by other means. But in the end it will amount to the same thing, disobedience.

When a child obeys unwillingly or shows resentment, take it as a sign of growing independence, and that he needs more time to himself. Don't interrupt him at play unless it is absolutely necessary. By careful planning a mother may know well in advance what chores or errands have to be done. Then a simple reminder to "please take these boxes down to the cellar before going out to play" or "please take a cup of sugar next door to Aunt Josie before you get settled reading," are bound to win a hearty response.

Talking Common Sense

When a father and mother are a self-appointed judge and jury and are united in their condemnation of the culprit, there isn't much a spectator can do.

In the instance under discussion, however, the spectator is in a position to talk common sense into the culprit, and that role should content her.

Whether this girl is an older sister doesn't matter. She evidently is. Anyway, her protective instinct is aroused. Better let the parents deal with the situation and be content with using such influence as one sister has on another in an effort to show the erring one the folly of her ways. A girl of nineteen who is disobedient and bent on exercising the privilege of leading her own life may succeed in living it in a manner that will heap misery on her family and herself. She may mean no harm, yet contrive to play hob with herself and everyone else. Not all young women of nineteen are capable of judging what's best for them, although they certainly are thoroughly competent to know right from wrong.

Parents are not always right, but I do think we must agree that they try to be. Also that they think they are. Maybe the parents in this case are unreasonable and too exacting, and perhaps the sister is in a state of rebellion. Maybe, on the other hand, she is something of a fool.

Making Her Understand

Since she won't listen to reason, the father is moved to beat it into her body since he is incapable of beating it into her brain.

If I were you I would concentrate on trying to make your sister obey her parents, and also to think enough of herself to come home at a reasonable hour.

Your sister is old enough to stand up for her rights. You are old enough to know parents are not given to chastising their children for fun. In other words, mind your own affairs.

Sponsoring the cause of the down-trodden is a thankless job. I have a notion your sister can take care of herself and that in time she may resent your intrusion no matter how well-meaning into her affairs.

Your love and admiration for your sister must not blind you to her faults. Naturally, you want her to be happy and dislike terribly to see her punished, even though she may deserve it. I am sure you can really help your sister by showing her what a fool she is to bring such humiliation on herself and unhappiness to you all for no better cause than an extra hour or so of amusement.

embargo imposed by the League of Nations in an effort to stop the Italian war and pledged the placable resistance to sanctions designed to choke the country into submission.

Embassies of nations imposing sanctions, particularly England, leader of the drastic move, were heavily guarded against attack by Italian patriots. Newsstands and book shops removed all English publications from sight. The guards around the English embassy, which a few months ago was two to three car-lengths, was increased to ten heavily armed men, with reserves stationed on nearby streets.

CROWDS DEMONSTRATE

In Rome and Milan large crowds demonstrated before the consulate and embassies of "friendly" nations who did not impose sanctions. Germany, United States, Brazil, Hungary and Austria, singing and cheering. Heavy police guards were expected to avert trouble or demonstrations at the British and other "hostile" embassies.

In addition to the uniformed guards, plain clothes officers mingled with passersby and closely observed all pedestrians as they passed the embassies.

Future Plans To Be Outlined At C.C. Meeting

At 10:30 p.m. the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, which has been in a short lull in which he will touch on the importance of industry to Richmond and on what Richmond has to offer to the city along this line.

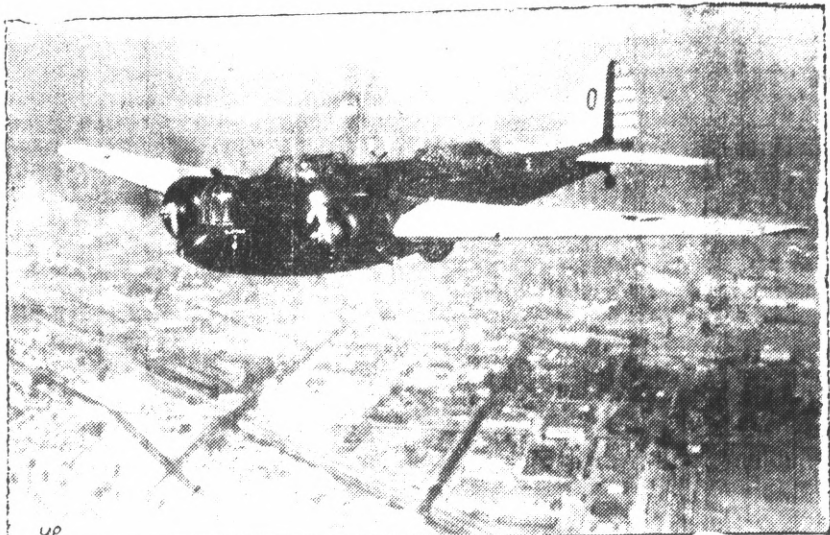

MAY SPEAKERS

Speakers have been selected from a variety of lines of industry who will elaborate the theme from their respective points of view. In practically every case these speakers will represent industries that are connected with Richmond and will do this over a very wide territory, including the city. The speakers will deal in some instances with immediate plans of the companies and in others will dwell on the general idea of a growth, improved economic condition in the country which must naturally be reflected in improved conditions for Richmond, the bay region and California.

Reports reaching the Chamber are to the effect that a feeling of optimism now pervades the business community, in view of recent statements emanating from the Administration that the New Deal "breathing spell" is to be made permanent. It is the purpose of the forthcoming meeting, according to President Sanford, to bring this sentiment to a focus and translate it into concrete terms understandable to the membership of the Chamber and the community at large. Indications point to a wide interest and a heavy attendance and those intending to come are urged to reserve ahead of the meeting in order to insure having a place at the dinner.

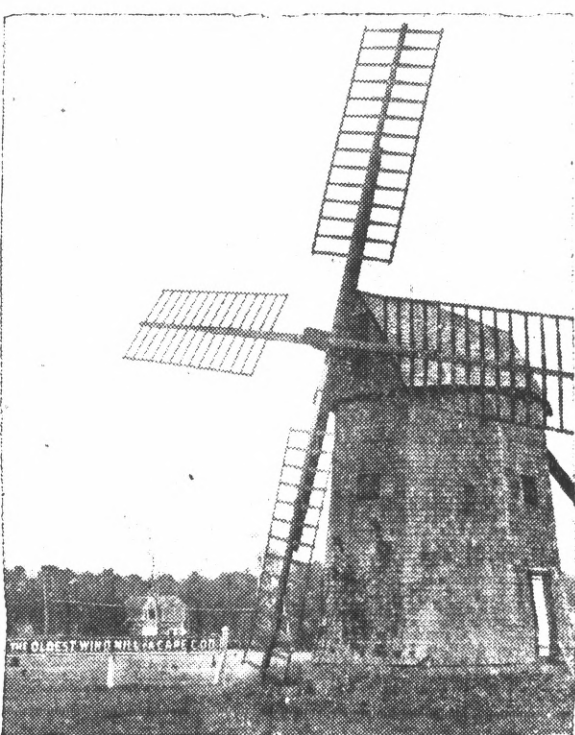

There will be nominations to fill the places of directors whose term are expiring. Eugene Fulton, well known baritone of San Francisco, will be the soloist, accompanied by Miss Frances Eileen.

Aid Limited To Worker's Wages

MARTIN, Nov. 18. The Costa citizen relief committee and the board of supervisors had today in an appeal to the WPA for continuance here of the distribution of surplus commodities.

The committee has been working on the matter since the WPA board of supervisors, on Nov. 12, and that the "security wage" being paid WPA workers is, in some instances, insufficient to meet family obligations and that the distribution of surplus commodities should be discontinued after a worker has been assigned to a work project and has received his first pay check.

And worth said he would inform the supervisors if any change in regulations is made.

SUCCESSFUL FIGHT

Efforts to secure the raise have been protracted for many weeks and the men and women a great increase in WPA money paid to can be Costa workers.

The plea for the increase was put before the board of supervisors. Despite two rejections, the supervisors persisted, finally being joined in the campaign by chambers of commerce, labor organizations and officials of numerous municipalities.

LONG IS PRAISED

When a communication from Richmond Local of Unemployed, signed by William Redding, secretary, was read at the meeting of the city council last evening, thanking the body for its aid in securing the raise, its aid in securing the raise was praised. The council should be to the board of supervisors, and particularly to Secretary Phelan, who was present.

Long was called on, and said the success of the fight was due to the cooperation of the city council and the board of supervisors. He said that the city council had been very helpful in the matter, and that the board of supervisors had been very helpful in the matter.

"At the first hearing your mayor appeared and put the question in the hands of the board of supervisors, and to him a great deal of credit is due, acting in his official capacity as head of the city of Richmond."

"In attending the meeting when this matter came up as your representative," said Scott, "I only do my duty. Most of the talking was done by the board of supervisors and the city council, and to them a great deal of credit is due. The city of Richmond is a most happy one, as it places the workers on a par with the workers of Alameda county."

ATTORNEY APPEARS

HEALEY ISSUES STATEMENT

District Attorney Healey today issued a statement, in which he said:

"We welcome the suit. The action of the track operator will bring the question of gambling into a court of equity. The case will be tried before a judge without a jury, which satisfies us. Legal authorities disagree on whether the option system is illegal and there has never been an appellate court decision on the matter."

"I believe the option system of betting is gambling and I believe I can convince the court."

"I wrote Sullivan that if sufficient evidence was not obtained in one raid, the raids would be continued and it might be necessary to seize track equipment for presentation before the court. If property is damaged during the course of these raids, I told him the track would have to stand the expense."
